He was sentenced to a consecutive ten years on the Criminal Sexual Conduct with a Minor, Second Degree charge that will begin when his first sentence is complete. He will have to serve eighty-five percent of his sentences before he is eligible for parole. Both crimes are classified as most serious and violent.

Evidence presented at the trial by Assistant Solicitor Shannon Odom established that between the years of 2003 and 2009, the defendant repeatedly forced a child under the age of eleven to engage in sexual acts with him.
